Electro-house.
Office of York Enterprise, Yorkville, N.C., Aug. 14, '91.
Atlantic Electro-house: Gentlemen—For the past few years my wife has been a sufferer from dyspepsia. She completely lost the desire to eat and her former self that life was almost destroyed. Her nervous system was almost entirely destroyed, and the slightest noise would startle her into a nervous spasm, which would last for hours. Medical skill failed to bring any relief.
Through the recommendation of an eminent physician we were induced to try the Electro-house. After a persistent use of the instrument, the effect has been wonderful. Her nervous system has been restored to its normal condition; her digestion is wonderfully improved; she is rapidly gaining in flesh and, upon the whole, is making a rapid recovery, which speaks volumes for the wonderful curative powers of the Electro-house, as her case was considered hopeless. If any are doubtful on the subject, let them try the Electro-house, and its wonderful power will quickly dispel all doubt. Yours truly, W. M. PRIST.

About Roses

There are legends and traditions and sweet familiar stories about roses, but none more true, lovely or pathetic than hover about, like old family phantasms, among medieval rural gardens whose hems are still redolent with comfrey and sweet cicely, whose fragrance, a two o'clock saphyr wafts into the writer's path almost daily.

Away with the turns of dead roses. The living rose for you and me! And the pretty and popular gossip about the velvet grace and social presence of the Gen. Jacquemont will soon be heard from the lips of the rosarian and the plebeian gardener. The amateur farmer who beautifies the old homestead grounds enjoys the culture of these royal flowers; their elegance is conspicuous in a deep rich red and the sweet home-country is fast making it the rose of its adoption.
It requires rich, loamy soil, and if propagated by layering it can be done in midsummer from the present season's growth.
Band down a shoot, and with a two-tined stick hold it within the mellow earth. The layers may be detached from the parent tree either in the fall or spring and transplanted. Once in cultivating one of these dark-hearted beauties I found its color to be its crowning merit, and was ever wishing I could twist the blooms and the twigs of the soft dark hair of some dainty French Phylis into readiness for some mythical conventional party; though in reality I did a wiser thing and plucked them for the flower committee, who placed them upon the stands by sick beds.

Around the "Jack" rose clings a rather grim and gory history, but there is always a mingling of charm in a sad legend so I want to tell it from memory. The French General Jacquemont was born in the West Indies and had a fiery temper. He had one daughter who bore the pretty name of Marguerite. An old nurse had always taken care of her. She grew very lovely and as good as beautiful, and the son of a neighbor gave her an honorable and unim-passioned love, which was returned with unquestioning faith. One day the fierce officer returned home unexpectedly and inquired for Marguerite. The nurse, fearing his anger, denied the knowledge of her whereabouts. The angry parent seized a small sword and ran into the garden where the two lovers sat side by side. His sweet daughter, filled with alarm, threw herself instinctively before her lover. The general and young Hubert crossed deadly swords and the lover fell dead at their feet.
Marguerite also died with the end of summer. From letters the father learned how true was the affection that awaited his return and was softened by remorse. Against the lovers had twined a pale pink rose. The lovers had sat there and the general ordered it cut to the ground. In the spring the shoots came up again, not pink, but bearing one single, perfect velvet red rose, full of passionate beauty. When called by the gardener to view the marvel, the old stricter father moaned and wept. "Shall I sever it, my master?" asked the old servant, ready to spare him grief. "No," was the answer, "God sent the rose." So the rose was named for him who spared it. Hence I think the "Jack" should be a tribute to recent love as the yellow Mabel Niel is a tribute to beauty. My admiration is divided between this rose, so becoming to "burnes," and the old doryland white rose, emblem of fidelity.—New England Homestead.

INDIAN SKELETONS.—Mr. Gerard Fowke, of the Bureau of Ethnology, Smithsonian Institute, opened an Indian mound on the borders of Woodstock recently and found 21 Indian skeletons, 15 of which were packed closely in the middle of the mound. From their position it was evident that the skeletons had been deposited in this place some time after death. They were covered with several wagon loads of limestone rock, which had evidently been brought from a ravine several hundred yards distant. The only relies found were two small gorgets or neck ornaments and one bone needle about six inches in length. From the character of the mound and the relics, it is supposed that this mound was made by some of the six nations.

Very few mounds are found in that section of Virginia.

APPEARED IN HER GRAVE CLOTHES.—It is not often that a person is taken to the penitentiary in his or her grave clothes.

This was the case, Sheriff Price, of Charlotte, N. C., thinks, in the case of the colored woman Jackson, who recently escaped the gallows in that county. Her garments were prepared for the execution, and she was attended in them when the commutation came.
As soon as the announcement reached the sheriff of the Governor's action, the woman was hurried to the prison.
